

TINA LINDEMANN, MD

www.tinalindemann.com

tina.lindemann@yahoo.com

Tina Lindemann was born (1972) and raised in Berlin, Germany, and as well finished medical school there in 2001 at Freie Universität Berlin.

Since she grew up with a father interested in Reich, she had her first contact with an accumulator as a small child and was pretty impressed. This led to a training in Orgone Therapy with Heiko Lassek, MD, parallel to her medical studies and to assisting in his later training groups in Berlin and Vienna. Several other teachers, such as Myron Sharaf, Richard Blasband and Björn Blumenthal, came for additional weekend workshops to Berlin during the four years of training and so allowed for a wider range of experience. She started seeing clients besides her studies in 1999.

After finishing medical school Tina Lindemann, MD worked in surgery and orthopedics, but soon got frustrated with the way patients and employees were treated in the system, which gave the impulse to start a freelance practice as an Orgonetherapist. Besides other things she did trainings in Acupuncture/TCM and Reconnective Healing additionally.

Teaching in Vienna, Austria led to moving there in 2006, and since then she is a full time freelance Orgonetherapist, occasionally giving workshops, making Orgone blankets for clients when needed and informs people about the use of the accumulator. If possible she lends accumulators to patients who can not afford one. A Training-course is in the planning.

The Orgone Energy Accumulator and its Use in Medical Treatment and Prevention

What is an Orgone Energy Accumulator? How is it built and used? Can everybody use it and what results can we expect? Do we actually know exactly how it functions? And can we just put it anywhere? I will share my experiences in the use with patients, including cancer patients, as well as my own experiences, from my first contact as a child to my own case history. We will discuss the possible gains and risks and the important points one should know about the interactions between the ORAC and the environment. Further, I will suggest what research could and should be done in the future, and give an overview of the current and past research.

The Emotional Plague – Today?

With the term “Emotional Plague“ Wilhelm Reich described a phenomenon everybody experiences over and over again, with others and probably in himself as well. What did Reich mean and what ideas did he have about the origin and effects of this social phenomenon? What were his ideas about how to deal with it? If the Emotional Plague is still functioning today, what does that mean for the individual and for society? I will give examples from various areas of daily life, and discuss different ways to deal with it and their probable outcome. Is there a possibility to prevent it before it occurs?

My personal experiences as a medical doctor working with medical Orgone Therapy for more than 13 Years

In this talk I will invite the audience along for a ride which I call “How to become a medical orgone therapist“, and describe how I came to take this ride myself. From the personal I will turn to some case histories and experiences from my practice, first in Berlin, and now in Vienna. The ride will include brief excursions into issues concerning contact with other physicians and the scientific world generally, the public perception of my work and possible legal dimensions. I will conclude with comments about who is likely to be best suited for taking this ride themselves, the training involved and characterological issues to be addressed.